A Symbol is what it says and something else besides. . .

The most frequent dream question I am asked is “What does this symbol mean?” More than anything else, dreamers want to understand the meaning of the people, places and things that emerge as images during sleep. Actually, we are immersed in symbols all the time. Whether in a dream state, surfing TV channels or on the Internet, we are surrounded by metaphorical images and their layers of meaning, both in our conscious waking life and from the depths of the unconscious. Advertisers are adept at making us think that if we imitate the characters in a commercial—drive a specific car or use a certain toothpaste—we’ll be happy and successful and loved by Mr. or Mrs. Right, just like the people in the ads.

What storytellers and advertisers are doing is similar to how our Dream Psyche functions in showing us images that we can identify with and if the connection is strong enough, that holds personal meaning for us. The difference with dreaming is that the development of these images originates within you, the dreamer. Come join us as we explore the wisdom of symbols.

ONE STEP

Do you have a pair of almost-new shoes in your closet that you know you will never wear? Could those shoes be the perfect fit for someone going on a job interview or reporting to work tomorrow? The idea of ONE STEP came from a dream that I put on my mental shelf for a couple of years. Would people really want to donate shoes? How would I collect them? Where would I send them? Recurring dreams about ONE STEP followed. My doubts remained. Then in the wee morning hours of the first day of 2011, a definitive dream told me to move forward. So it shall be.

You are invited to take a step in quality recycling. Please bring shoes to the dream workshop or if you are not coming and would like to donate shoes, call me or send an e-mail.
